Tibetan Brass & Crystal Singing Bowls Musician
Ron Esposito Releases “Soul Burst”

Cincinnati, OH (18 July 2013) – Ron Esposito’s third CD, “Soul Burst” (Spiral Music 2013), features the Tibetan brass and crystal singing bowls artist with an eclectic line-up of highly respected musicians from jazz, classical, world, and Indian music traditions. On “Soul Burst” he continues to expand his exploration of the bowls in new musical contexts building on his two previous releases “We Are One” (Spiral Music 2011) and “Open Heart” (Spiral Music 2009). Esposito plays five Tibetan brass bowls, nine quartz crystal singing bowls and adds his throat singing vocals to two tracks. He is joined by James Feist, tabla; John Ruzsa, bansuri and alto flute; Dave Schneider, sitar; Audrey Causilla, harmonium and vocal; Steve Flora, bass and Marc Wolfley, percussion. “Soul Burst,” is available on CDBaby.com, Amazon.com and at Everybody’s Records and Shake It Records in Cincinnati. During the two years since his last CD was released, Esposito’s music has found an audience on television. His recordings have been placed in the network and cable television shows “Hawaii 5-0” (CBS), “Nashville” (ABC), “Touch” (Fox), “Common Law” (USA) and “Ray Donovan” (Showtime).

“Ron Esposito creates soulful and calming tones with the singing bowls. They ring with such beauty; you can’t help but be transported to a meditative state,” comments Tanvi Patel, CEO/Partner, Crucial Music Corporation in Los Angeles. “The production on his albums “Soul Burst,” “Open Heart” and “We Are One” is bright and the musicianship is master class. His music is perfect for spa, yoga and meditative scenes in film and television shows.”

“Soul Burst” is the convergence of two separate trios with the addition of vocals. “I had been going through this mental list of instruments and sounds I wanted to use on my next recording,” comments Esposito. “I knew I wanted strings, but decided the yearning feel and a vocal quality could be achieved with a bowed bass. This was a new experience for jazz bassist Steve Flora, but he brought it and the results are transcendent.” Marc Wolfley, predominately a jazz percussionist who also performs regularly with the Cincinnati Pops, adds depth and a sense of timelessness to the ensemble’s overall sound. Esposito’s long-time passion for Indian music is articulated by renowned tabla artist Jim Feist and his frequent partner John Ruzsa on bansuri flute. The sitar performed by Dave Schneider adds another layer of texture weaving between melody and drone. Audrey Causilla’s harmonium and vocal performance has a spacious, pristine and heartfelt quality.

Throat singing is a vocalization technique that Esposito has performed live for a number of years. He honors fans’ requests for more in the composition “Elementals,” as well as the short track, “Karuna,” featuring his accompaniment on the Tibetan brass bowls. “Soul Burst” closes with “Looking In,” a spacious meditative space created by solo bowls.

Ron Esposito resides in Cincinnati, Ohio, where he also serves clients as a certified Life Coach and Enneagram teacher at the Conscious Living Center. He performs frequently in concert, at yoga and meditation centers, and for private events throughout the region. His sound meditation and concert events can be found on his website.

“Quiet, dreamy and introspective, Soul Burst is a soothing blend of World and Indian music that includes sitar, tablas, bansuri, harmonium, and a mixture of brass bowls and quartz crystal singing bowls. Fans of ECM and Windham Hill will enjoy it... Soul Burst is music you can meditate to, but you can also become fully immersed in the soundscape, as with [Pink Floyd’s] Dark Side of the Moon.”
